

Testimony for the Record
Submitted to the U.S. Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions for the Hearing
“Making Health Care Affordable: Solutions to Lower Costs and Empower Patients”
July 31, 2025
Wendell Potter
President, Center for Health and Democracy

Sixteen years have passed since I first testified before the Senate as a former health insurance executive.

I warned lawmakers back then about the business practices of the increasingly consolidated health insurance industry that were making our health care system both increasingly unaffordable and off limits to growing millions of low-income and middle-class Americans.

I said that during my 20 years in the industry, I saw how big insurance corporations “confuse their customers and dump the sick – all so they can satisfy their Wall Street investors.”

Unfortunately, what I said in 2009 is even more true now as a result of insurers’ rapid vertical integration. Far more American families are dealing with the consequences of a decades-long bipartisan consensus that my former employers could be trusted. Over and over they have assured us that they could create and run a system that would control costs, foster quality care, and be simple and fair.

Their siren song of a public-private partnership – one they could be trusted to lead – has been irresistible. Among their assurances was that they could take tried-and-true approaches developed in nonprofit settings, initially known as managed care and now more often called value-based care, and scale them to everyone’s benefit. We now have decades of empirical evidence that they have not delivered on their promises and cannot be trusted with either our tax dollars or our premium dollars.

Democrats and Republicans alike have believed that my former employers would be good-faith partners in that public-private partnership, so much so that at two notable times in recent history they trusted them with the keys to the car. Yes, both parties set up guardrails in their historic bills, but those guardrails would prove to be not only easy to maneuver around but even useful in making hundreds of billions in profits for themselves and their shareholders.

I confess that I supported both of those bills, the first time as a health care executive and the second time as a vocal critic of my former employers. In both cases, I believed and hoped, as the sponsors of both bills did, that the new statutes would improve access to care and save employers, patients and taxpayers a lot of money.

While both laws resulted in incremental gains for many Americans, they also resulted in unintended consequences that have enriched big insurers and their shareholders at the expense of working families, seniors and taxpayers.

Congressional attempts to hold health insurers more accountable

The first of those two bills was the Medicare Modernization Act of 2003 (MMA), which created both Medicare Part D and the Medicare Advantage program as we know it today. The Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (ACA) would come seven years later.

Both bills had important provisions to change the business practices of health insurers, but lawmakers did not anticipate the creativity of the industry not only to make lemonade out of what many of us thought naively to be lemons but to catapult up the Fortune 500 list of America's biggest companies. UnitedHealth Group is now the third largest U.S. company. Only Walmart and Amazon collect more revenue from their customers. CVS/Aetna is right behind it, and Cigna and Humana, where I used to work, are not far down that list.

I mentioned earlier that insurers confuse their customers and dump the sick. It was a problem that both the MMA and the ACA sought to address. Before 2003, some insurers went to great lengths to sign up the youngest and healthiest seniors and to shun or drop those who were older and likely needed more care. To address that, the MMA established a risk-scoring mechanism to pay insurers more for their less-healthy enrollees. Numerous media and government reports have shown how insurers have rigged that mechanism by claiming their enrollees are sicker than they really are. The rampant upcoding helps explain how Medicare Advantage has become such a cash cow for a handful of insurers, UnitedHealthcare in particular, which has far more Medicare Advantage enrollees than any other insurer.

In the commercial market, before the ACA was enacted, insurers were spending less and less of our premium dollars every year to pay claims. Insurers view paying a claim a loss, hence the term medical-loss ratio, or MLR, which is the percentage of premiums insurers pay out in medical claims. As you know, the ACA included a well-intended provision to require insurers to spend at least 80% to 85% of premiums on their enrollees' medical care, but once again, the industry figured out a work-around to boost profits.

Because the MLR provision doesn't apply to health care providers, insurers embarked on a buying spree of physician practices, clinics, home health providers, pharmacy benefit managers and data companies. Long story short, big insurance holding companies, UnitedHealth especially, can technically meet the ACA's MLR requirements by paying themselves. The insurance division of UnitedHealth Group (UnitedHealthcare) now transfers billions of dollars every year to the many providers that now comprise the company's other big division, Optum.

Revealing the scope and reach of the nation's biggest health care corporation

Earlier this month, my team and I released the results of a months' long investigation into the structure of UnitedHealth, using reports insurers must file with state regulators for compliance and solvency purposes. We found that that company now comprises nearly 3,000 subsidiaries, most of which are involved in health care delivery.¹ The complete list of subsidiaries can be found at the end of my testimony totaling more than 400 pages of entities owned by UnitedHealth Group.

What we found disturbed us because, as we learned, conglomerates like UnitedHealth have more control over our interactions with the health care system than we ever thought. From the moment a patient searches for a doctor to the moment they fill a prescription or are admitted to a nursing home, UnitedHealth Group profits at nearly every step, often invisibly. Let me walk you through how.

An American patient's journey in 2025

Finding care -- When patients need to find a doctor and search online, they likely are unaware that healthgrades.com, a popular site with ratings, reviews, and information on doctors and hospitals, is owned by UnitedHealth Group through its subsidiary RVO Health and profits from this patient interaction. The site itself reports that half of all Americans who see doctors each year use Healthgrades to find care. Healthgrades portrays itself as an unbiased arbiter of information. However, it is owned by the largest insurer and employer of physicians in the country, which poses huge potential conflicts of interest.

Seeing a doctor -- Once a patient chooses a doctor, there is a 1 in 10 chance that doctor is employed by a practice or facility owned by UnitedHealth Group through its Optum subsidiary, which profits from this patient interaction. It is almost impossible for patients to know if their doctor is employed by UnitedHealth Group because the individual medical practices are often given discrete names such as American Health Network of Ohio or The Polyclinic in Washington.

Research - If a patient receives a diagnosis during a doctor visit, they may do research on the condition and its treatment options. If a patient reads any information from Healthline.com or Medical News Today, they may not realize they are reading information created by UnitedHealth Group because these two health news sites are owned by RVO Health. What appears as unbiased medical advice is in fact part of the UnitedHealth Group conglomerate.

Prior authorization -- After receiving a diagnosis, if a patient needs surgery to treat it, their insurance company, which for more than 50 million people in the U.S. is UnitedHealthcare, will require a prior authorization for that care. UnitedHealth Care will have the power to decide if the patient gets the care their doctor ordered, and they profit from delaying or denying this care.

Prescription drugs -- When a patient needs a prescription, the pharmacy benefit manager (PBM) Optum Rx which serves 66 million people in the U.S., decides if a prescription is covered and how much the patient must pay. In many cases, Optum Rx suddenly stops covering certain medications or forces patients to “fail first” on cheaper medications before they approve the medication prescribed by the patient's doctor. Optum Rx is another subsidiary of UnitedHealth Group that profits from this patient interaction. UnitedHealth Group also owns 32 pharmacies where it dispenses drugs to patients.

Nursing homes -- If a patient is placed in a nursing home, their care team may include providers employed by UnitedHealth who can delay transferring patients to the hospital to cut costs. Insurers can make a profit from delaying these hospital transfers.

Home care -- If a patient receives home care, their care very well may be provided by an entity owned by UnitedHealth Group but not be aware of that ownership. The hundreds of home care organizations owned by UnitedHealth Group have names like Landmark Health or Almost Family Personal Care, making it unlikely patients will know it's controlled by UnitedHealth Group. UnitedHealth Group profits from this patient interaction.

Veteran care -- Maybe you're a veteran, and after getting the care you need, you go to your local VA clinic. You likely won't know that Optum Serve, a UnitedHealth company, administers

VA Community Care benefits. By administering this program for the government, UnitedHealth Group profits off of the VA with evidence indicating that Optum overcharges the VA by billions.

If you're a veteran over 65, you've probably seen ads for UnitedHealth's AARP Patriot Plan marketed as a Medicare Advantage plan "made just for veterans." You're being targeted because UnitedHealth knows you get care through the VA. If you enroll, even if you don't use many MA services, United still gets paid full government rates.

In a February 2025 report, the Department of Veterans Affairs Office of the Inspector General (OIG) found that the VHA overpaid its third-party administrators (TPAs) by more than $1 billion from FY 2020-2024.² The VHA overpaid Optum by $105.1 million from FY 2020-2022 and TriWest by $73.4 million from FY 2020-2023 due to TPAs charging the VHA incorrect rates. Optum overcharged the VHA by $783.4 million from FY2020-May 2024 for dental services provided by community care providers. Optum was able to charge the extra amount because of a technicality in the contract that did not specifically prevent Optum from charging the VHA more than the company was reimbursing the community care provider for the service. One of TriWest's contracts also allowed it to overcharge the VHA by $127.3 million over the same time period. An OIG report from 2021 found that providers providing care for veterans through the Community Care Program billed for higher paying evaluation and management services codes at much higher rates than other doctors in the same specialty, which is evidence of upcoding.³ The report also found that providers were potentially double billing for services provided by adding additional codes that were already covered on the bill by a global surgery code. These additional codes cost the VA $59.6 million from FY 2020 to FY 2022. The VA OIG found that there were $128 million of duplicate payments over five years for veterans who used the Community Care Program and also have Medicare.⁴

In the case of veterans enrolled in Medicare Advantage (MA), the private MA plans collect the full capitated payments from Medicare for the expected medical costs of that enrollee for the entire year when in reality, much of their care is paid for by the VHA. According to a recent study from Harvard, as much as $1.3 billion in excess funding went to Medicare Advantage plans for veterans who mainly use VHA care instead.⁵ When a veteran has a UnitedHealthcare MA plan and uses the Community Care Program administered by Optum, the company allegedly is double-dipping by collecting payment from Medicare and the VHA for the same care.

Health data -- Almost all patients in the U.S. have some part of their medical data and billing administered by Change Healthcare, which provides services like payment platforms for insurers to pay doctors and process claims. UnitedHealth Group owns Change Healthcare through its subsidiary OptumInsight, which profits from this patient interaction.

Circumventing Congressional intent

While there are many aspects of UnitedHealth's empire that warrant concern, one of the most concerning is the ability it provides to circumvent regulations that require insurers to spend our premium dollars on health care. Insurance companies are required to spend at least 80-85% of the money they receive as premium payments on medical care. Vertical integration makes it possible to avoid this requirement.

For example, UnitedHealth Group owns UnitedHealthcare, an insurer, and many physician practices such as Medexpress Primary Care Oklahoma. Investigations revealed that UnitedHealth pays its physician groups significantly more than it pays physicians it does now own in the same markets for similar services.⁶ By doing this, UnitedHealthcare (the insurer) transfers money to UnitedHealth's physician subsidiaries, which are profit centers themselves, while reporting that same money as "medical claims" paid by UnitedHealthcare.

Let me put this in terms that are familiar from another heavily regulated industry: banking. Imagine a bank that's required by law to invest most of its deposits in loans that benefit customers, say, affordable mortgages or small business loans, and that limits how much it can shift into risky or self-serving ventures. Now imagine that bank owns a real estate company. Instead of making legitimate customer loans, the bank quietly funnels large sums to its own real estate arm, on paper, calling them "market-rate loans." But those loans are inflated, or unnecessary, and the money just cycles back into the bank's own pockets. The bank reports that it's complying with the law by making customer loans, but in reality, it's profiting off a closed-loop transaction with itself. That kind of self-dealing is illegal in banking. Federal law explicitly prohibits banks from moving money between affiliated entities at inflated values because it hides risk and misleads regulators. Now compare that to what's happening in health care. Insurers are required to spend a set percentage of premium dollars on patient care under the Medical Loss Ratio rule. But if the insurer owns the physician practice, it can simply pay that practice inflated rates, mark it down as "medical spending," and funnel the money back to itself, just like the bank's sham loan. The government counts it as care, but it's really profit, just rerouted through a white coat. This kind of internal deal would raise red flags or trigger enforcement in banking or finance. But in health care, it's not only legal, it's invisible under current rules.

UnitedHealth Group's use of these internal transfers, known as intercompany eliminations, has nearly doubled over the past 14 years and now comprise almost one-third of UnitedHealth Group's total revenues (31.1% as of the second quarter of 2025). Large insurers that have transformed themselves into vertically integrated conglomerates have little incentive to keep prices down because the more they charge customers, including employers, unions, individuals and the government, the more they get to retain and convert to profits.

A good argument could be made that the MLR provision of the ACA may have incentivized UnitedHealth and the other big insurers to buy up as much of the U.S. health care delivery system as they can with our taxes and premium dollars. And as mentioned above, evidence shows that insurers are often more generous in their payments to providers they own than to independent practices, which is putting doctors they don't own in perilous financial situations. The majority of physician practices are now owned by either big hospital systems or big insurance conglomerates. UnitedHealth is now the biggest employer of doctors in the country. Many of the remaining independent physician practices have had to turn to capital investment as a lifeline to remain viable — not, I would argue, to exploit patients, but to resist consolidation into hospital systems or health plan-owned provider networks that can dictate care and pay themselves on both ends.

⁶ Bob Herman, "UnitedHealth pays its own physician groups considerably more than others, driving up consumer costs and its profits," Stat, November 25, 2024, <https://www.statnews.com/2024/11/25/unitedhealth-higher-payments-optum-providers-converts-expenses-to-profits/>

What insurers focus on most and what they largely ignore to meet profit expectations

It's important to keep in mind that there are two basic ways health systems and health insurers attempt to control costs: addressing the unit cost of health care goods and services, and addressing access to those goods and services. Unfortunately, American insurers focus almost exclusively on access rather than controlling the ballooning costs of medical services. And they do it in the name of value-based care, claiming their increasing control of the health care system improves care coordination. Perhaps not surprisingly, they tout studies they fund to claim their version of value-based care results in better outcomes. But on their watch, instead of seamlessly approving and coordinating needed care, insurers have erected barriers that confuse patients and hinder them from getting the care they need and, as described above, justify their self-dealing under the wolf-in-sheep's-clothing guise of value-based care.

Affordability in American health care is often framed as a problem of excessive provider billing or inefficiency, but the dominant driver is the increasing control that large, vertically integrated insurance companies exert over care — prioritizing shareholder return over patient needs. When an insurer owns so much of the health care system, there is far less incentive to control costs because the more they charge, the more they can pay themselves and keep as profits through self-dealing. To that end, insurers have ramped up the use of prior-authorization, they have excluded many independent providers from their networks or made it untenable for them to participate, and they have saddled patients with unreasonably high out-of-pocket requirements, which penalizes people with low- and moderate incomes and people with chronic conditions. They have also used federal health programs like Medicare Advantage, the Veterans Affairs Community Care program, and Medicaid as ATM machines to rake in more than $80 billion in unearned payments each year by gaming the system. More than 75% of UnitedHealth's U.S. health insurance revenue ($295 billion) came from public programs in 2024. UnitedHealthcare gained 400,000 new MA enrollees in 2025 — more than any competitor. It also took in $80.6 billion from the Medicaid program, and it administers much of the VA's Community Care Network via Optum Serve. The company collects more revenue from public programs than private employers — despite having many more commercial enrollees.

Soaring out-of-pocket requirements and the medical debt crisis

And then there is the growing burden of excessive cost sharing imposed by the nation's insurers. High-deductible health plans and rising out-of-pocket costs have been sold as tools to engage patients, but they've become barriers to care. I know this because in my old career, I helped promote high-deductible plans to employers, policymakers and the public. I probably would still be promoting them had I not come face to face with hundreds of people, many of whom had driven long distances, to a free pop-up medical clinic at a county fairground near where I grew up in Tennessee. Many of them had insurance but couldn't afford to get the care they needed because they didn't have nearly enough money to meet their deductibles. So they were having to resort to getting care in animal stalls at that fairground. In every state in this country, patients are delaying or avoiding needed treatment not because doctors are unavailable — but because insurers make it too expensive or too complicated to access them. When a family receives a denial or an unexpected bill, more often than not it's the result of a convoluted insurance design — a narrow network, opaque prior authorization process, or cost-sharing rules — not price-gouging by doctors.

As a consequence, millions of Americans are now going deep into medical debt – 100 million at last count – or going without care and getting sicker. And it is not just patients who are burdened by unnecessary prior authorization. Physicians tell me the number one driver of burnout isn't patient care — it's fighting insurers to get that care approved. The delays and retroactive denials they have to deal with day in and day out, along with constantly changing networks, are making it harder for doctors to practice medicine and for patients to get seen.

Restoring the doctor-patient relationship

If we truly want affordability and access, we must restore physician independence that has been systematically eroded by insurance industry business practices and their vertical integration, and we must make sure independent practices have appropriate access to capital so they don't have to sell out to hospital systems and insurance giants.

And know this, as vertically integrated insurance conglomerates have been making these barriers increasingly insurmountable, they've also been hitting us and our employers with constant premium increases that exceed both general and medical inflation. An employer-sponsored policy that cost a family a little more than $9,000 on average in 2003 costs more than $25,000 now. Meanwhile, the profits of big health insurers have exploded. UnitedHealth alone made $34 billion in profits just last year. Meanwhile, hundreds of rural and safety net hospitals and independent pharmacies have closed because of inadequate payments from insurers or expensive hassles of dealing with them. Hardest hit are people who live in small towns and rural communities across the country.

Another thing I used to say when I was an industry executive was that health insurance protects patients, but increasingly, it is health insurance companies – more precisely, vertically integrated leviathans that U.S. insurers have morphed into – that stand in the way of care. Whether it's a patient waiting on a prior authorization for a critical scan, or a provider being denied reimbursement for services already rendered, the common denominator is insurer interference.

Proposals to consider

To address all of this we need bold changes that do not take these companies at their word to provide good care. Instead we need to 1) fix the rules, 2) de-center profit, 3) give people a true choice, and 4) break up the monopolies.

- 1) Fix the rules
 - Close the loopholes in medical loss ratio regulations.
 - Require much more public disclosure of ownership and acquisitions in the health care industry, including on patient-facing platforms.
- 2) De-center profit
 - Prohibit the use of tax dollars for stock buybacks, shareholder dividends, or advertising by insurers.
 - Cap prices in private insurance markets, as Indiana, Vermont, Washington, Rhode Island, and Oregon have, and use the savings to fund Medicaid.⁷
 - Use global budgets similar to the Maryland global budget model, which saves over $1 billion over five years and while avoiding hospital closures.⁸
- 3) Give people a choice

⁷ Hayden Rooke-Ley, "How states can mitigate Trump's Medicaid cuts – and set their health care systems on a better path," Stat, July 24, 2025, <https://www.statnews.com/2025/07/24/medicaid-funding-cuts-states-obba-price-controls-private-insurance/>

⁸ Madeline Jackson-Fowl, "Understanding the success behind Maryland's model," Delaware Journal of Public Health, December 18, 2019, <https://pmc.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/articles/PMC8389156/>.

- Provide an alternative to private insurance for any individual or employer who wants it, such as buying into Traditional Medicare or creating a public option similar to Traditional Medicare.
- 4) Break up the monopolies
- Limit the sectors of the health care system that one company can have a profit-making stake in.
 - Approve the bipartisan Patients Before Monopolies Act, sponsored by Senators Warren and Hawley and Representatives Harshbarger and Auchincloss, which prohibits a parent company of a PBM or insurer from owning a pharmacy.
 - Develop similar solutions to ensure that no single entity controls so many parts of a patient's health care journey, for example prohibiting the parent company of an insurer from owning physician practices or medical facilities.
 - Move away from the use of insurer-owned PBMs for public health programs like Medicare and Medicaid and build on the Traditional Medicare infrastructure to administer pharmacy benefits for seniors, people with disabilities and low-income individuals and families

In closing, I encourage you and your colleagues, regardless of party affiliation, to reassess the so-called public-private partnership my former colleagues in the insurance business have sold so successfully to the point that it is viewed as somehow sacred. These giant corporations will continue to profit from this one-sided partnership as long as they have the keys and control the underlying mechanism. It is time to take the keys away, force these corporations to be not only transparent in how they construct networks, deny claims, and steer patients but also far more accountable to those of us who need care and pay so much for it with our hard-earned paychecks and taxes.
