The Honorable Miguel Cardona
Secretary
U.S. Department of Education
400 Maryland Ave., SW
Washington, D.C. 20202

Dear Secretary Cardona,

This letter is to request you appear before the HELP Committee to discuss the Biden Administration's proposed budget for Fiscal Year 2025 and overall agency operations. Your confirmation hearing should not be the only time you appear before the Committee with jurisdiction over the authorization of the Department of Education (DeptEd).

The DeptEd has a poor track record of spending money on politically motivated projects rather than Congressional mandated policies and has not been publicly held to account for these choices. The recent botched rollout of the Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) is a prime example of DeptEd prioritizing student loan schemes over its basic responsibilities mandated by Congress and essential to American families. The new FAFSA was supposed to make applying for financial aid for college easier; however, the roll-out has been a prolonged fiasco that has left millions of students and families worse off.

With students at the top of mind, it is concerning to see many programs that seem common-sense to the average American either cut or flat-funded in the President's budget.

The 2022 National Assessment of Educational Progress (NAEP) of fourth-grade students shows that only about a third of students are proficient in reading and math. For eighth graders the numbers are more concerning, so it is disheartening the lack of support to improve primary and secondary school instruction.¹ The President's budget also cuts the charter school program when over one million students are on a waitlist to attend one, another disservice to families.²

Furthermore, I would request you to explain decisions to support the administration's social policies over the classroom needs of students. This includes flat-funding programs for Native Hawaiian, Alaska Native, and rural communities, while increasing support for English learners, 23 percent of whom are non-citizens.³ This budget would also increase funding to full-service community schools, given concerns about what services these schools provide and what access parents have to their students' records.⁴

Most authorizing committees hold budget hearings with their respective cabinet agencies so that the members of the authorizing committee can better understand the proposed budget request. Such a hearing is at the heart of our role in oversight of the agencies under our jurisdiction and in remaining accountable to American taxpayers.

I look forward to your reply.

Sincerely,

Bill Cassidy, M.D.
