Dear Ms. Pan:

Safeguarding sensitive consumer information is essential to ensuring that consumers know how companies collect and share data. We have already seen cases where foreign adversaries such as China have sought to exploit U.S. laws to acquire information that could be used against individuals and our national interests. As we consider steps to protect families from having their information misused, we must pay particular attention to protecting the safety of children.

Momcozy is the leading company in the world for baby care products, including the number one breast pump sold worldwide in 2025.¹ Momcozy links these products to its consumer app to provide reminders, logging information, and other tools to support mothers. Given the role Momcozy's products play for new families, ensuring the information Momcozy collects is safeguarded is essential. Momcozy's privacy policy, however, raises concerns about the company's commitment to "supporting the entire motherhood journey."² This privacy policy states that the company hosts its website in Canada and "may process your personal information in the United States and China."³ To better understand how Momcozy protects the privacy of mothers and families, additional information is needed. To that end, I request answers to the following questions by July 6, 2026:

¹ Our Story, Momcozy (May 21, 2026), <https://momcozy.com/pages/our-story>.

² Momcozy Ranked No. 1 Wearable Breast Pump Brand Worldwide, According to Grand View Research, Momcozy (Nov. 11, 2025), <https://www.globenewswire.com/news-release/2025/11/11/3185476/0/en/momcozy-ranked-no-1-wearable-breast-pump-brand-worldwide-according-to-grand-view-research.html>.

³ Momcozy Privacy Notice, Momcozy (Oct. 10, 2023), <https://momcozy.com/pages/momcozy-privacy-notice>.

1. Momcozy states that it collects detailed person information including “information related to the stage of your pregnancy,” “location data,” “your Internet Protocol address”, and “professional or employment-related information.”⁴
 - a. How does Momcozy use this information in its internal operations?
 - b. Does Momcozy sell this information to third parties, including data brokers?
 - c. How does Momcozy share this information with governments where this information is stored?
2. Momcozy states that the company hosts its site in China and as part of “providing... personal information, it is being transferred to, stored, collected, or processed in Canada, the United States, and China.”⁵
 - a. Why does Momcozy host its site in Canada?
 - b. What personal information is stored in foreign countries, including Canada and China?
 - c. What privacy and security protocols does Momcozy have in place to ensure this information is not improperly accessed?
 - d. China’s laws governing data privacy require companies operating in China to broadly share information “in matters of national security.”⁶ How does Momcozy share information with any entities associated with the Chinese Communist Party or the Chinese government, including any specific information it has shared of individuals who reside in the United States?
 - e. In the last five years, has Momcozy shared any information of individuals who reside in the United States with the Chinese Communist Party or the Chinese government?
3. Momcozy offers several products, including wearable breast pumps, baby monitors, and sound machines that connect to Momcozy’s app via Bluetooth or Wi-Fi.
 - a. What specific information does Momcozy connect via these products?
 - b. How is this information stored and collected?
 - c. How does Momcozy ensure that its remote access functions are not accessed without authorization?
